Women's suffrage refers to women gaining the right of vote. In the United States, Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Lucretia Mott was the leader of the Suffragette movement and then Susan B Anthony joined to. During the 1840s and 1850s women fight for the vote. There efforts are real important.

In the beginning womens vote and the black vote were fought for together because suffragettes were originally part of the abolitionist movement. Frederick Douglass was a famous former slave and speaker and abolitionist and had been a member of the same groups until the movements split apart to focus on they're own interests.

Some states have given the vote to women in the 19th century but the national vote was not given to women until 1920, the nineteenth amendment was ratified which gave women the right to vote in the constitution. California allowed women to vote in 1911 but some states had already allowed women for voting by then all of the leaders of the movement were died. Like Stanton and Anthony.

In 1917 Many women were arrested, jailed, and beated for protesting of the right to vote some were given nothing but food with worms and filthy water. One of the women alice Paul were leader of National Women's Party, she was committed into a psychiatric ward for being a suffragette and was reportedly force fed thru a tube when she went on a hunger strike. This was made into a movie starring Hillary Swank, called Iron Jawed Angels.
